Importance of feminine hygiene for the food related industry

Improper disposal of used sanitary pads will lure pest such as flying insects to infest, and may risk pest infiltration to the food processing facilities.

Providing a discrete and hygienic way to dispose used sanitary pads is also a vital consideration as part of employee protection measures.

Rentokil Malaysia shares insights on why progressive education on pest exclusion is important for an effective supply chain risk management

In Asia, where 673 million tonnes or 91% of world rice production occurs (FAO 2013), annual food losses due to rodents would be enough to feed 200 million people. Pest infestation causes a myriad of consequences which lead to massive profit losses. An effective integrated pest management (IPM) in place with continuous pest awareness training plays an important role in risk management to prevent losses.
